

A DEAD CITY.

San Francisco is becoming one of the deadest cities on the Pacific coast.

There was a time when it had a world wide reputation for life and vitality, but of late years its commercial blood has become stagnant and it is yearly growing more and more inert.

The Nicaragua Canal scheme which would be worth millions to San Francisco, has received very little attention.

The business men seem unable to wake up and recognize its importance.

San Francisco should raise five or ten million dollars for the scheme, but its business men have lost the nerve and grit of early days, or rather the men who had financial nerve years ago, are all dead.

If Ralston or Sharon were alive today, one would see different times in San Francisco.

How long would those men be in putting up liberal money for Miller's canal scheme? Not long surely.

Sutro is about as live as any of them, and believes in public improvements.

In San Francisco the sewerage is bad, the streets are in a wretched condition, and the whole town impresses one as a big country village.

The men who make much money, simply invest in buildings and collect the rent.

They would not risk one dollar to make twenty.

If the present generation of business men down there do not die off soon, the place will be beaten by Sauceto.

In its weekly financial review the firm of Henry Clews & Co., of New York, states that it is many years since there has been such a "disorganized condition of financial relations between this country and Europe as has recently developed." Explaining the cause of the great amount of gold exported from the United States, the circular asserts that the distrust prevailing abroad has rendered unnegotiable bills drawn by Americans on European houses, and the consequent scarcity of negotiable exchange obliges the continued export of gold long after the balance of our accounts with the outside world had ceased to rule against us. The effect is noted in the distress shown by our importers and exporters over unnegotiable bills and in our extraordinary ability to stand the drain of gold without much trouble following. The firm considers that while the rest of the world will suffer from depression and sacrifice, the United States has the advantage of low prices for our imports and high prices for our food exports, and also a preference by foreign capitalists for investments in American securities.

Every man in the United States should be required to become a citizen within a certain time or he should be excluded from certain privileges which citizens enjoy. We need not resort to expatriation, as Russia is doing, but we should establish the status of every person in the country, so that we may know who is for us and who against us.—S. F. Chronicle.

A police officer in Sacramento who lived with a prostitute was recently killed by her. His relations with the woman were notorious, yet he was allowed to keep his place on the force, when respectable men of families could not get an appointment.

A correspondent writes the Appeal a long letter to show voters how to beat the Australian ballot law. He had better get his sack out and give the matter a practical test in the next Senatorial election.

The State money for the School Fund was placed at the disposal of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction yesterday.
